Agency official notes increasing maternal deaths

THE UNITED NATIONS yesterday warned that failure to pass a controversial reproductive health (RH) bill amid stiff opposition from the Catholic Church could reverse the country's gains in development goals.

The RH bill would make it mandatory for the government to provide free contraceptives in a country where more than 80 percent of the population is Catholic and which has one of the highest maternal mortality rates in Southeast Asia.

Ugochi Daniels, country representative from the UN Population Fund, said she remained "cautiously optimistic" that President Aquino's allies who dominate the House of Representatives could muster the numbers to pass the bill tomorrow after 14 years of often divisive debate.

"What is important now is to highlight the urgency of the bill," Daniels said.

Unless the bill is passed, she said maternal deaths in the Philippines would continue to rise with more and more women getting pregnant at a young age without the proper health care and access to key reproductive health information.

Between 2006 and 2010, the maternal mortality rate increased to 221 deaths per 100,000 live births, from 162 deaths per 100,000 live births in 2000 to 2005, according to the government's 2011 Family Health Survey.

"I think we've gone from 11 (maternal deaths) a day to between 14 and 15 a day now. And unfortunately, most of these are poor women," she said.

The UN Population Fund was "very concerned" about the sit-

NOT SINCE the turbulent days of the conflict between the Marcos dictatorship and the Catholic Church in the Philippines led by Jaime Cardinal Sin over human and political rights have the state and the Church been as bitterly at odds as they are today.

This time, they are fighting over a proposed policy on population control.

On Saturday the dispute came to a head with the Catholic Bishops' Conference of the Philippines (CBCP) leading thousands of Catholics in a prayer rally to protest against President Aquino's support for the reproductive health (RH) bill that would curb population growth through contraceptives.

MOST BEMEDALED American swimmer Michael Phelps holds up a trophy after being honored as the most decorated Olympian at London Aquatics Centre. AP

With one last gold, Phelps caps career that inspired a generation

LONDON—One by one, his rivals formed a handshake line behind the blocks at London Aquatics Centre and paid homage to Michael Phelps, the lord of the Olympic rings.

In his racing finale on Saturday night, as a member of the US men's 4x100-meter medley relay, Phelps collected his 22nd medal—and 18th gold.

Before Phelps retired, he had one last trophy to collect: a statuette that recognized his place in Olympic history and resembled a crinkled piece of aluminum foil from a foot-long sandwich.

"It's kind of weird looking at this and seeing 'Greatest Olympian of All Time,'" Phelps said, adding: "I finished my career the way I wanted to. I think that's pretty cool."

It sounds ludicrous now, but when Phelps, now 27, began his epic journey in swimming, he had no clue what American Mark Spitz had done. Phelps was looking to the future when he put together the most RAMOS, Tarlac—The wreath was big and imposing, and could not easily be missed. But nobody seemed to have noticed it as it stood by the door of Diocesan Shrine of Saint Thomas of the Child Jesus, the town's parish church, where hazing victim Marc Andre Marcos spent his last night.

It carried a card that read: "Condolences from: Bonds of Andrei Marcos."

Who these "bonds" were and what organization they belonged to, nobody seemed to know.

Most of Marcos' friends and relatives declined to comment about it. His father, [illegible], said he did not want to speculate but accepted the gesture of sympathy.

The Government is pursuing its commitment to provide Convenient, Affordable, Reliable, Efficient, and Safe transport services. As such, the DOTC is inviting interested parties to participate in the OPEN and TRANSPARENT bidding process for the P160 MILLION SAN VICENTE, KALIBO AND SANGA-SANGA AIRPORT DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS.

DOTC

INVITATION TO BID

P160 MILLION DEVELOPMENT OF SAN VICENTE, KALIBO AND SANGA-SANGA AIRPORTS

1 San Vicente International Airport Development Project

The new San Vicente International Airport in Palawan is located in New Agutaya, San Vicente. It sits in the heart of tourism developments in Palawan, including El Nido and a 14-kilometer stretch of white sand beach in San Vicente.

The DOTC earlier announced a bidding for the construction of San Vicente Airport Passenger Terminal Building and other peripheral civil works. The bidding for this stage of the project covers mostly airside development, namely:

Completion of Runway Extension
(L = 150m. by W = 30m.)

Peripheral Components
Construction of Vehicular Parking Area (VPA) (10,670.00 sq.m.)
Security Fence (268 m.)
CHB Perimeter Fence (L = 437 m.)
Drainage System (294 m.)
Hill Obstruction Removal (V = 45,437.00 cu.m.)
Construction of Pedestrian Gates (2-unit)
Vehicular Gates (2-unit)

Concrete Paving of Runway
(150m. long by 30m. wide)

2 Kalibo International Airport Development Project

Kalibo International Airport is growing to be among the busiest airports in the Philippines. In 2010 alone, it serviced 1,005,845 passengers, about 12% higher than a year ago, ranking 7th in the list of busiest airports in the country in terms of passenger traffic. To further enable this airport to meet the increasing traffic, the DOTC is implementing the following improvements, namely:

Completion of Asphalt Overlay of Runway
(L = 237m. by W =45m.)

Concrete Paving of Apron Expansion with Taxiway
(14,950.00 sq.m.)

Construction of Security Fence
(234 m.)

3 Sanga-Sanga Airport Development Project

The Sanga-Sanga Airport is located in Bongao, the capital of Tawi-Tawi province. It is the only airport serving the province that thrives on agriculture and barter trade business. Improvements to the airport are underway to sustain investment opportunities, such as tourism and aquaculture. The DOTC earlier announced a bidding for the site development and construction of new passenger terminal building and expansion of apron. This phase of the airport upgrade includes:

Construction of Vehicular Parking Area
(A = 5,100 sq. m.)

Construction of Drainage System
(254.00 m.)

Construction of Perimeter Fence and Security Fence
(Perimeter Fence L=2,040 m. | Security Fence 420.00 m.)

2008 BLOODY PARAÑAQUE SHOOT-OUT

Judge asked: Let go of case

By [illegible]

THE KIN of two of the fatalities in the bloody shoot-out between policemen and a group of suspected robbers in Parañaque City has asked the judge in charge of the case to inhibit himself "out of delicadeza."

Last week, lawyer Jerry [illegible] who is representing Lilian de Vera filed a motion for inhibition against Judge Jaime Guray of the Parañaque Regional Trial Court Branch 259.

De Vera's husband, Alfonso, and their 7-year-old daughter, Lia Allana, were among those killed in the crossfire when a shoot-out broke out between members of the Philippine National Police's Highway Patrol Group (HPG) and Waray-Waray robbery gang in 2008.

[illegible] said that Guray's objectivity was now under question because in 2010, he dismissed the double-murder charges against the HPG operatives for lack of probable cause.

"He says the Court of Appeals ordered him to hear the case but we don't even have to talk about legal [illegible] arguments. Out of delicadeza, he should just let it go," he told the Inquirer in a phone interview.

In June, the appellate court reversed Guray's ruling and ordered him to continue hearing the charges against the eight HPG operatives—Chief Inspectors Lawrence Cajipe and Joel Mendoza, Inspector [illegible], Police Officers 3 [illegible] Jr. and [illegible], Police Officers 2 Eduardo Blanco and Edwin Santos and Police Officer 1 [illegible].

According to the Court of Appeals, Guray's decision smacked of "a rush to judgment without deliberate evaluation of the evidence from both sides [as] demanded by [illegible]."

The judge had explained that he dismissed the case because the HPG operatives merely served as a blocking force during the police operation which later on led to a shoot-out.

His explanation, however, did not sit well with the prosecution.

[illegible] further alleged that in previous hearings, Guray had expressed confidence that his decision to junk the case against the HPG would be upheld by the appellate court. The judge had

US discreetly plans for post-Assad Syria

SYRIAN refugees mourn at the funeral of five Free Syrian Army fighters, killed by Syrian security forces near the Turkish-Syrian border on Aug. 4. AP

WASHINGTON—Even with fighting raging in Syria and President Bashar Assad digging in, the state department and Pentagon are quietly sharpening plans to cope with a flood of refugees, help maintain basic health and municipal services, restart a shattered economy and avoid a security vacuum in the wake of Assad's fall, administration officials say.

Mindful of US mistakes following the invasion of Iraq in 2003, both agencies have created a number of cells to draft plans for what many officials expect to be a chaotic, violent aftermath that could spread instability over Syria's borders, even though no official could predict whether Assad's demise was weeks or months away.

The state department is considering positioning additional food and medical supplies in the region and is studying how to dismantle the raft of US and European sanctions against Syria quickly to allow investment to flow in and business to resume, avoiding further deterioration of life for ordinary people.

Security vacuum

It is also pressing the opposition in Syria to avoid harsh retribution against the Army, the police and the municipal agencies of Assad's government that could cause a security vacuum and a collapse of services. Looting and chaos after the overthrow of Saddam Hussein in Iraq in 2003 planted the seeds of a lasting insurgency.

"We don't want them to dissolve all the institutions in place," an administration official said, speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss planning that is largely being conducted out of public view.

Even though the White House has all but ruled out military intervention, the Pentagon is drafting contingency plans for operations with Nato or regional allies to manage a large flow of refugees over Syria's borders and safeguard the country's arsenal of chemical weapons.

The administration's efforts have been driven by a bleak prognosis shared by most officials: Assad's fall would be likely to set off a grave, potentially violent and unpredictable implosion in a country strained by even more tribal, ethnic and sectarian divisions than Iraq, possibly in the midst of a presidential election campaign at home.

"The main question we're looking at is how it all plays out after the Assad regime collapses," one US official said. "Chapter 1 is he's gone. Chapter 2 is the post-Assad transition, and initial efforts at stabilization. Chapter 3 is completely unknown, and therefore more than a little scary."

The planning is particularly delicate because the Obama administration does not want to create the appearance of US interference in a transitional, post-Assad government, even though the United States would inevitably be entangled in any turmoil that resulted.

'No to foreign transition plan'

Rafif Jouejati, an American of Syrian ancestry who is a spokesperson for a network of activists in Syria, said those committed to Assad's overthrow had no interest in "a foreign transition plan," however well intentioned.

"What we don't want to do is descend into the total chaos that Iraq did," said Jouejati, who is participating in a similar planning effort among Syrian activists coordinated through the United States Institute of Peace, an independent but congressionally financed organization in Washington. Even so, she added, "I don't think we want the United States to impose lessons learned here."

The state department and Pentagon planning efforts became more operational last month after hopes for an internationally brokered resolution faltered in the face of Russian and Chinese opposition in the UN Security Council. The planning is being closely coordinated with regional allies like Turkey, Jordan and Israel, and it coincides with an expansion of overt and covert US and foreign assistance to Syria's increasingly bypassed rebel fighters.

While the administration has ruled out arming the rebels directly, the administration has authorized $25 million in direct assistance for medical supplies and communication equipment to help the fighters and civilian opponents of Assad coordinate their activities and, crucially, disseminate reports about the fighting to the rest of the world.

Other countries, including Turkey, Saudi Arabia and Qatar, are providing weapons, assisted by a small number of officers from the Central Intelligence Agency who are vetting the fighters receiving them and working with state department officials trying to unify the fighters with political leaders inside and outside the country. New York Times News Service

THE DEPARTMENT of Environment and Natural Resources has given the permit to topple down these trees on Lacson Avenue, Sampaloc. The sidewalk inside the University of Santo Tomas will be narrowed for road expansion to pave way for a multimillion flyover.

ANOTHER FLYOVER is preparing to soar in one of Manila's most populous districts.

The district is Sampaloc, whose already dense population is aggravated by the daily influx of thousands of students who attend the University of Santo Tomas (UST), Far Eastern University, National University, University of the East and other vast campuses in the University Belt.

The Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH) announced plans to construct the flyover on Lacson Avenue, eventually to be followed

Vibrant Vitalis visions

By Jessica Jalandoni-Robbles [illegible]

A MOSAIC of rainbow shapes appearing as color bursts formed by dashes of paint in mingling hues and tones suddenly reveals a softly muted idyllic countryside.

The [illegible] view from a hill is a neo-Impressionist rendition by Macario Vitalis (1898-1989) of many a charming sight in the different regions of France where he took up residence since the late '20s.

Such pieces that rarely come home to the Philippines are showcased in "Vitalis: The French Connection" at Leon Gallery, Corinthian Plaza, Legaspi Village, Makati City.

That Vitalis chose to live in the country where his painting styles and techniques originated was but a con-

CRUCIFIXION reminiscent of Byzantine mosaics

[illegible] pursuit of artistry. For this he was revered and feted by the French communities where he stayed and was even declared an honorary Breton.

The artist left Ilocos Sur as a young man to study art in San Francisco in 1917. He left for England in 1920, then finally headed to the artists' enclave of Montmartre the following year.

GSIS Museum features JIV Manila artists

ALAIN NOTEBA, [illegible] and [illegible] will hold the group exhibit "Insight: Soliloquies in Three," opening on Aug. 6, 6 p.m., at the GSIS Museum.

The exhibit features some 30 [illegible] and large paintings and drawings, in [illegible] acrylic, pen and ink and found objects.

"Insight" is really three exhibits in one. Each artist's collection tells a story that's different from the other two, but apparently in the same vein. As a whole, it's an anthology," said curator [illegible].

"These artists are not first-timers in the business of meaning-making. In fact, they have so many reflections and views to share, which they do through their artworks. These pieces talk about life, ideologies, paradigms and various messages of all sorts. In this exhibit, art speaks."

"Insight" will be on view until Aug. 31. Call JIV Manila art at [illegible] or visit www.jivmanilaart.com

Bayanihan to come up with Manobo dance interpretations

By Suzie Moya Benitez
Contributor

THE BAYANIHAN RESEARCH team toured Butuan and Cabadbaran, Agusan del Norte.

Hosted by Judith Pamaong, Rep. Angel Amante, and fundraising led by Agnes Araneta, the study tour enabled the team to interview Manobo tribes and historian King Hermosa, and attend lectures on local arts and crafts.

More than the Manobo dances, music, costumes and traditional practices, there were nuggets of new learnings and observations the research group gained. The group asked about Manobo aspirations, their spirituality and their family life.

A dance piece will soon be the outcome of this study, and will be gracefully showcased during the national dance company's 2013 season production at the Cultural Center of the Philippines, Dec. 20-27.

The Bayanihan research team aims to create the best dance story on the largest indigenous community in the country. It seeks to set up an artistic clearing house where the numerous Manobo groups can converge.

The Bayanihan believes that to dance is to live. Dance brings about social cohesion and societal transformation, thereby strengthening cultural relations and fostering cultural development.

The research team will try to render Manobo aspirations into distinct expressions of dance and music.

The team includes Pam Concio, performer and trainer; Ime Yabut, actress; Maricelle Bonifacio, performer and artist; and musician Rudolph Pelaez, who will not only showcase playing the hubing but dance in the beat of the kulintang.

Other members of the study team are Sao Lualhati, costume designer and dancer; Melito Vale Cruz, music director; and Bong Jose, dance director and photographer.

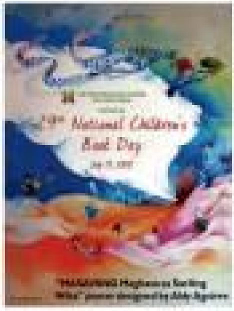

The author is trustee and senior director of the Bayanihan Folk Arts Foundation.

The rat race can get distracting, she admitted. "Modern life is too fast-paced. Technology pushes us to be always on the go. It's wise to slow down and reflect once in a while."
